THE FIGHT AGAINST CANCER NEEDS YOUR VOICE.

JOIN TODAY.

VOICES of Black Women is a groundbreaking long-term study led by the American Cancer Society, aimed at understanding health conditions like cancer so we can learn how to improve overall health among Black women.

We are calling upon Black women who:

- Are 20-60 years old
- Live in the United States
- Have never been diagnosed with cancer (except basal or squamous skin cancer)

Using a private VOICES website, you will take two online surveys each year about your life and health history. The safety of your data is our priority, and your data will only be used by qualified researchers to help us gather meaningful insights into Black women's health. Learn more in our FAQS on voices.cancer.org.

Not eligible? You can also use your voice to invite someone to join in your honor.

"I am determined to be part of this study to help change these outcomes, to ensure that future generations of Black women have better access to early detection, treatment, and support. Every data point we gather, every insight we uncover, could mean a chance at survival for someone's loved one. This study is not just research; it's a lifeline for our community."

-VOICES Participant

"I know that Black women are not always heard by clinicians, misdiagnosed, under insured and mistreated by the medical community. I want to change outcomes, ensure our Black voice is heard collectively, and share this journey with my 3 daughters."
